What is a Community Transformation Grant?
Community Transformation Grants (CTGs) support state and local groups that are trying to reduce chronic disease. These groups include government agencies, tribes and territories, nonprofit organizations, businesses and communities across the country. A CTG funds the Healthy Sacramento Coalition. CTG funding is provided by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Why are CTGs important?
CTGs promote healthy communities and healthy lifestyles, and make it easier to make healthy choices. This is really important for neighborhoods with the greatest burden of chronic disease.

Who received Community Transformation Grants?
In September 2011, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention awarded $103 million in 61 Community Transformation Grants. The Healthy Sacramento Coalition received $499,229 per year for two years to build capacity. The coalition will apply for implementation funding in spring 2013.

What chronic illnesses/health issues does the coalition address?
The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention outlines five focus areas for the CTG program:
1. Tobacco-free living
2. Active living and healthy eating
3. Prevention and control of high blood pressure and high cholesterol
4. Social and emotional wellness
5. Healthy and safe physical environments

Implementation award recipients need to spend at least 50% of funding on Focus Areas 1-3. Focus Areas 4 and 5 are optional. CTG programs need to focus on coordinated efforts to improve community health in a way that causes the noticeable reduction of preventable diseases.
